“In all debates, let truth be thy aim, not victory, or an unjust interest.” – William Penn

From Socratic methods of ancient Greece and ‘Shastrarth’ in ancient India to modern parliaments, debates form the cornerstone of exchanging and evaluating informed opinion and establishing an acceptable solution. In order to train students in this ancient and yet relevant tradition of intellectual participation, a debate was organized on the given motion.

The students of classes IV and V assembled in the auditorium to witness the final round of the debate. The activity saw enthusiastic participation from students by way of their presentation of arguments and interjections. The students used examples and information to present their case and also showed quick thinking skills by answering the interjections at the spot.

This activity aimed at improving the presentation and speaking skills of students, apart from training them to present their ideas in cogent and logical fashion. It also helped them learn to listen closely to be able to ask proper questions. It also helped them hone their public speaking skills.

Judging by the tremendous response, the activity seems to have enthused the students about public speaking. We remain committed to organize more such activities in future, which will help students learn in a fun way.
